

Music Program Hits a High Note

Want to play the banjo like Steve Martin, the clarinet like Benny Goodman, or just hold your own in a community orchestra? ■ The nonprofit New Horizons International Music Association can help people age 50 and older learn to play an instrument or revive a skill learned long ago in school. There are 7,000 members in 182 orchestras, bands and choruses in 41 states and overseas, fulfilling their musical dreams in New Horizons programs. Once a week, budding musicians meet in groups for lessons for an hour and then play together for the second hour. ■ The groups get together at schools, colleges, recreation centers, church basements and senior centers. And this year, informal celebrations are planned across the country to mark New Horizons' 20th anniversary, including camps and concerts. ■ For more information, go to newhorizonsmusic.org. —Judi Hasson

Listen to the Bulletin on NFB-NEWSLINE, a free service of the National Federation of the Blind. Call 1-866-504-7300 toll-free or go to www.nfbnewsline.org.